In the Long Run

you and your friends will prize the portrait that looks like you — your truest self, free from stage effects and little conceits.

It is in this "long run" photography that PURDY success has been won.

Portraiture by the Camera that one cannot laugh at or cry over in later years.

For the present pleasure and future pride protect your photographic self by having PURDY make the portraits.

Along Life's Way

Lucille Frances Healey

Along life's way are many trails,
Of sorts—both good and bad;
Some beckon and intrigue us
With adventures to be had.

Still others wind on upward
To a peak we fain would climb;
But we must fight for every inch,
And not stand marking time.

We sacrifice the primrose path,
Oft tire our very souls,
If we would gain the mountain top,
And thus achieve our goals.

Some linger round life's foothills,
Content to laugh and play,
Yet others struggle onwards,
Delaying on their way
To give a lift, a helping hand
To someone in distress;
They fail to scale the heights of fame,
Their meed is happiness,
The peace of mind, the joy of heart,
The glow of friendship's fire,
Will lead them on, and ever on,
They never seem to tire.

There will be those who walk alone
In quiet by the sea,
Philosophers who contemplate
God's magnanimity.

We trudge, or skip, or race along,
Which e'er the case may be:—
But moral courage need we all
To face our destiny.

Class History

In the similitude of a Dream

As I walked through the wilderness of this world, I lighted on a certain place, where was a Den; and I laid me down in that place to sleep; and as I slept I dreamed a dream. I dreamed, and behold I saw a group of boys and girls dressed in their newest "first-day-of school" clothes, standing in front of a certain building, wearing cheerful smiles on their shining faces, and clutching desperately in one hand a handkerchief, and in the other, a pencil case. I looked and saw a hint of disappointment on their faces, as their superiors came hurrying in all directions from the building, shunning them, laughing at their pencil cases, and all but trampling them under foot. As I beheld them, I tried to think who this group could be. Suddenly it came to me. This building was the Waltham High School and these were sophomores. Their attitude made me wonder what they would say if they realized that, by derivation of their name, sophomore, they were half-wise and half-foolish. In a few moments, having forgotten for the present their treatment by their elders, they entered the building, and when confronted by numerous doors, in bewilderment looked at one another and asked, "Where do we go?" They were soon rescued, as I further saw, by a friendly white-haired gentleman, whom they later discovered to be one of their kindest and most helpful advisers, Mr. Burke.

Now I further saw in my dream that, for the next few weeks, several of these sophomores were helplessly wandering around the building searching for their rooms. They always found it necessary to seek aid from their teachers, who, in turn, amusedly glanced at them and murmured to themselves, "They'll learn." As time went on, they did learn, and soon they were experienced enough to hold their first class meeting, at which they elected, as their officers, George MacDonald, president; William Macdonald, vice-president; Barbara Furbush, secretary-treasurer; and William Rice, auditor.

Now I saw in my dream that, under the guidance of their officers, these sophomores soon became well acquainted with the school and its activities, and that some even ventured into football. Others faithfully cheered the team, and later supported the equally successful hockey and baseball teams.

Now I beheld in my dream that, as the warm June days approached, the sophomores became restless, and frequently complained of the disturbing noises heard around the building. When they were informed that this noise was due to the beginning of the construction of the long-awaited new wing, I saw that they endured this discomfort much more courageously, even with much rejoicing. Thus they happily began their summer vacation, eagerly looking forward to returning to an enlarged high school.

In the fall of 1935 these same sophomores returned to school as juniors, refreshed by their summer vacation and, strange to say, somewhat eager to begin school. Their enthusiasm was perhaps due to the fact that the opening of school had been delayed until October. As it was, everyone agreed that the new addition was well worth waiting for. The east wing had not, as yet, been completed; therefore it was necessary to attend school while it was under construction.

I now saw in my dream that these juniors no longer considered themselves the "scum" of the school, for a new class of sophomores had entered, and the juniors wasted no time in emphasizing their position. On the other hand, they did not entirely forget their superiors, the seniors, and, while in their presence managed to assume an attitude of humility and deference. Nevertheless, as they became better acquainted, they found this companionship not altogether unpleasant. The juniors, now somewhat experienced, realized that they must have guiding officers, and so they elected John Krol, president; Joseph Zeno, vice-president; Barbara Furbush, secretary-treasurer; and Mae Viscogliosi, auditor.

The fall of the year seemed to arouse in them a yearning for outdoor activities, and it was thus I saw in my dream the girls busily engaged in field hockey, and the boys equally busy with football. Various boys in the class, now somewhat older, stronger, and more experienced, succeeded in making the team. I saw also in my dream that, though the novelty of cheering had somewhat worn off, the school spirit had by no means decreased. This fact was clearly shown on practically every Saturday afternoon from September to Thanksgiving Day. The entire cheering section was filled to its capacity with these enthusiastic fans, displaying their "red" and W's in all ways conceivable, and rooting until they were hoarse. They were once again rewarded with a victorious team, which lost only one game.

Victory did not halt with the football team, moreover, for the hockey team, spurred on by their faithful followers, succeeded in winning the Bay State League Championship.

Now I further saw in my dream that Dame Fortune still followed the juniors. Returning from their Christmas vacation, they found that Santa had very thoughtfully left them a present. It was the east wing, now ready for use. When they had finished rejoicing that they at last had room enough to move around in, they realized to their dismay, that the sophomores would now attend school during the same hours as they. These enlarged quarters also meant that the school day would be lengthened a whole hour. Such objections this brought about! But nothing could be done, so they consoled themselves with the thought that the new hours at least gave them enough time to make the matinée performance at the Embassy.

At this point I saw in my dream that at a specified time each day, there seemed to be a general stampede. I later discovered that this was the luncheon hour, and that everyone was trying to beat everyone else down to the new cafeteria. Such a hubbub of excitement! Everyone was rushing about looking for a seat, at the same time trying to decide what to have for luncheon. Groups of friends were talking over their various activities, attempting to speak above the clatter of dishes. Occasionally the crash of a broken milk bottle added to the noise. However, in twenty minutes, the confusion was over, and students hurriedly devoured their last bite before returning to classes.

As spring approached, the juniors decided to show their appreciation of their fellow schoolmates, the seniors, and so arranged the Junior Prom to be given in their honor at Nutting's-on-the-Charles. Joseph Zeno was chosen chairman, and with the assistance of a capable committee made the social a gala event. The hall was attractively decorated with the class motto, "Carpe Diem," and with blue and silver trimmings, which blended becomingly with the girls' colorful gowns as they circled about with their escorts to the strains of a popular orchestra.

But now, I saw in my dream that the seniors were leaving school. The graduation of these schoolmates brought to the juniors a bit of sadness, especially as the occasion meant also the retirement of their beloved principal, Mr. Burke. He had been a kind and helpful friend to them, and they would indeed miss his cheerful presence.

Although they felt that they were much too old to need a rest, juniors gladly welcomed another vacation, generously thinking that the teachers would benefit by a summer of relaxation.

Now I beheld in my dream that in the fall these juniors returned to school as seniors, more broad-minded and experienced. They now knew how it felt to be sophisticated seniors, and treated their lesser schoolmates in the same condescending manner as they had been treated two years before.

For their last year in the high school, it was necessary for these seniors to become accustomed to the new school officials, Mr. Goodrich, now principal, and Mr. Ward, sub-master. Once acquainted with the combination, they found it very pleasing.

Now I further saw in my dream that the class must again elect officers, and that they chose John Krol, president for the second year; Howard Kelly, vice-president; Barbara Furbush, secretary-treasurer for the third year; and John Melody, auditor.

In the fall of the year, all attention was turned toward football. The all-scholastic choices, John Krol, John Melody, and Joe Zeno, together with other talented players, completed a combination that was practically invincible and won all games played, with the exception of one. The team gained additional honor when John Krol, the "schoolboy sensation," was awarded the trophy for being the most valuable player of the year.

Once again victory did not halt with the end of the football season, for the hockey team, equally successful, retained the Bay State League Championship, and also received the Henry W. Lawson trophy for its distinguished ability.

The students felt pride in several other accomplishments. The school magazine, "The Mirror," was considered one of the best of its kind. Under the editorship of Wilson Slaunwhite, assisted by an excellent staff, it was published several times through the year, and contained an assortment of interesting articles. Then too, the Dramatic Club, with Jean Davis president, the Commercial Club under president Joseph DeMeo, and the Reading Club, with Arthur Clark president, had a very successful year both socially and financially In addition the band gained recognition as one of the best bands in these parts.

Just as the year before a surprise was in store when the seniors returned from their Christmas vacation, so this time it was the completion of the new gym. Surely nothing could have seemed more desirable to them than this, after three years of being cooped up in such a tiny space. Then, too, with the addition of the gym came the new showers. Local hairdressers did a rushing business the first few weeks, giving permanent waves to those whose supposedly natural waves had disappeared.

I beheld in my dream that the first social to take place in the gym was the Senior Dance. The entire committee, with Leo Shaughnessy, chairman, worked valiantly to make the affair a success. Many attended, making a beautiful picture of laughter, gay colors, and popular music.

Further competition in sports was introduced when the basketball team became a member of the Suburban League. The team was surprisingly successful, finishing the season in second place,—a truly remarkable record for their first year.

I further saw that the senior class displayed their dramatic ability, as well as their individuality, in presenting, under the chairmanship of Mae Viscogliosi, three one-act plays; namely, "Happy Returns", "The Weasel", and "Grandma Pulls the Strings". Here I saw Alice Hatch, a preening hostess, Nancy Andrews, a lady villain, and Dorothy Cox, a hypocritical guest; there, in the midst of crime and gunplay, Audrey Coburn, the pretty leading lady, Robert Rutter, her handsome fiancé, and Shirley Millar, the understanding aunt. Finally I saw in my dream a tall, handsome hero kneeling at the feet of a charming lady. I looked again and behold, who should the hero be but the gallant John Melody, and the leading lady, lovely Jean Davis. In the other corner I saw a quaint old lady sitting in her wheel chair, knitting. Who could this be? Why, of course, Lucille Healey, scoring a hit, too.

At this time I noticed in my dream that the seniors had decided to have their pictures taken. Leo Shaughnessy was chairman of this committee. From this time on, seniors spent all their spare moments discussing the fascinating topic of each other's pictures.

Seniors again displayed their dramatic ability when the boys of IV G division presented a three-act play "Paging John Smith". Much time was spent on this original venture and the results were gratifying.

I now beheld in my dream that these seniors were about to step out into the world. Their paths would stretch in different directions. Some would be rocky and thorny. The sky above would not always be clear. But I saw in my dream their determination that, as they fought on seeking their goal, they would never forget their motto, "Carpe Diem".

So I awoke, and behold it was a dream.

Last Will and Testament of The Class of 1937

To Whom It May Concern:

Be it known that we, the Class of 1937 of the Waltham Senior High School, being of sound mind and in full possession of our faculties and capable of disposing of our property, after the payment of our just debts and funeral charges, hereby bequeath and devise our meagerly estate as follows:

To the Class of 1938 we leave the brilliant, but slow-moving minds of the Class of 1937, so that they may not procrastinate until it is too late.

To the Class of 1939 we leave the vision of another new wing so that their class may not be torn asunder by cruel fate.

To Mr. Goodrich, our understanding new principal, we leave many years in which he may give his valuable and constructive criticism to unfortunate culprits.

To Mr. Ward we leave a third hand for stamping that never ending stack of notes with perfected but ancient alibis.

To Miss Hoffman we leave many peaceful years to enjoy a well-earned freedom.

To that genial French teacher, Mr. Belliveau, we leave a class of serious pupils who will listen to and assimilate his wise fatherly talks.

To Miss Allen we leave a capable chauffeur and all around errand boy such as she has lost.

To Miss Burgess we leave a bottomless box of pencils and a powerhouse of determination behind those words, "I'm not going to lend another pencil!"

To Miss Morse, our fashionable, charming sewing teacher, we leave an automatic pin-picker so that she will not be stooped before she is eighty.

To Miss Hatch we leave a compact biological zoo that will interest her classes. (The trade school is very interesting at times.)

To Miss Sewall and Miss Frost we leave a set of "perfect alibis" to be distributed among those poor creatures who are afraid of water.

Lucille Healey leaves her ability to be as busy as a button to any up and coming Junior who wants to develop that efficient gait.

Dick Rice leaves his striped bow ties, pink shirts, and blazer socks to any Junior who wants to brighten the dull atmosphere of his home room.

Marjorie Dennis and Rose Mase leave their nicknames "legs" and "stretch" to Dorothy Shelin and Carmen Algeri. May this gift prove prophetic.

Carolyn Weston leaves her little habit of repeating "What's the homework?" to any one who wants to irritate a busy teacher.

Angelo Falzone denotes his extra small pair of trousers to any undersized Junior who needs them.

Martin Nugent surrenders his subtle sense of humor and sleight of hand to those Juniors who lack that certain something known as dexterity.

That noisy friend of ours, Peter Cannistraro, leaves his noble and well meaning peculiarities to John Mele, who is invariably misunderstood.

Angus Cane, Beau Brummel, and courtier as well, leaves his knack of contriving to sit near a pretty girl to Bernard Fine, who also enjoys whispering in shell pink feminine ears.

The class leaves Betty Stevens, a prospective Senior, a gross of combs so that she may be seen at all times combing that inflated pompadour of hers.

We hereby nominate and appoint as co-executors, Miss Woodward, Miss Rand, and Mr. Mitchell, who shall carry out the provisions of this, our last will and testament.

In testimony thereof, we have set our hand and affixed our seal and declaring this to be our last will and testament, this ninth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-seven, and of the United States of America one hundred and sixty-fifth.

We, the Class of '37, do make this codicil to our will and hereby appoint Jane Mayall, who shall present the gifts to those who have been decreed worthy of such honors.

HELENA C. PETROVICH.

Dedicated to the Seniors

We hope the gods may be gracious
And bestow rich blessings on you
As you pass through these stately portals
To a life that is strange and new.

"Courage" and "Perseverence"
Are the first we would have them give,
"Success" and then "Prosperity"
For all the days that you live.

Have courage to face the problems
You meet as you journey along,
Remember there are always some things
That once in a while must go wrong.

Accomplish in your undertakings,
The future face unafraid,
And count as your richest blessings
The friends each day you have made.

May success crown your every effort,
Wealth fill your pockets with gold,
Each year be a bead of great promise
As your rosary of life is told.

For with "Carpe Diem" as your motto
You cannot fail to achieve
The ambitions of a lifetime
If you in yourselves believe.

CORA DAY, '39.

Class Prophecy

"Ho hum! Well, that's over" I remarked to myself as I came from behind the stage in the Embassy Theatre. I had just received my diploma from the Mayor, and all around me my classmates were being congratulated by their friends and relatives. I was hurrying out of the building in search of er-er—I'll let you guess who—when suddenly I felt myself treadding on someone's toes. As I turned around to excuse myself, I saw a boy holding on to his toes. Before I could say anything he cried, "Oh, get off my feet, you big bully."

Hearing these words and in the tone he used, I couldn't help starting to kid him. "Did I hurt your little tootsies, sonny?", I asked in a very sissified tone, trying to imitate him as much as possible.

"Oh, a freshie," he remarked, still using the same tone.

"Yes," says I, still using his tone.

"Why," says he, "I'll knock you into the next twenty years."

"Tut, tut!" says I. Then it came. A ten-ton truck, I think it was anyway, hit me on the jaw.

Well, I didn't stay down long, but when I got up, the fellow was gone. I walked out of the theater into the sunlight. Everything seemed strange. I felt a hand on my arm. "Well, where have you been? Did you get lost or what? You know we haven't much time to look the old town over." All this came from Barbara Furbush.

"What are you talking about?" I asked.

"Are you trying to kid me or something?" she said. "You know we just came back to see this 1957 graduation class and to look over the old town."

"Oh-er-you-you mean-er-this is-er."

"What's the matter with you? Are you cucked in the nut or something? she asked, looking very much disgusted.

"Oh-er-no," I replied not wishing to be thought daffy. "Oh, no, ha ha, I'm just kidding, ha ha-er-un."

"Well, let's go on, she suggested. "I will lead the way."

We got into a snappy-looking roadster and rode to Main Street. On the way up I found by reading a booklet that was in the car that I was the head of a ready-made-house factory. My slogan was—"Buy Bill's Beautiful Built Bungalows or Bunkhouses Be Better Befitted for the Bughouse." Miss Furbush was my junior partner. She decided the minor details while I took care of the big problems. From the way things were going I guessed that so far only minor details had come up. Looking further through the booklet, I saw that a few Waltham people were working in the factory. The eminent Joe Zeno was the head interior decorator, although he had changed his name to Josephus Percival Zenoros for professional reasons. Angelo Falzone, Patsy (Thin Man) Caia, Frank Aberle, Albert Terestre, and Peter Rizzo were the Bungaling Bungalow Builders.

But here I was, I found, on my first vacation in years, coming back to the old town to meet my old friends. "The city is much different," remarked Barbara, as we sped along a six-lane highway that took the place of Main Street. We learned later that it had been built as a present to the city by that great construction expert, Ralph Salvucci. We could see that he was using the same old crumbly cement.

The next thing that caught our eye was a large sign—"John Melody's Risky Rocky Racetrack". Entering, we bought a paper from our old pal Gus Cane, who always loved to sell papers. We could see by the paper that the Bemis Derby was being run. "Sweet Patootie", owned by the millionaire playboy Carl Lando, was favorite, but only because he was being ridden by the world's best jockey, Peter Cannistraro, who always managed to win by a nose. Sitting in a private box were the famous heads of Miracle Picture Studios, Cline Mendelsohn and Dean Lewis, whose slogan was "If it's a good Picture, it's a Miracle." Along with them was their A No. 1 yes-man, Kenneth Trombley, with his favorite stooges: Martin Nugent, Dick Rice, David Power, and Glen Allen. The starter of the race was John Kaveleskie, who was always starting something. Back in the stables with feed bag and rake were John Moran and Joe Vanario playing put and take with the horses.

"There are Louis Cunningham, Joe Demeo, and Hollis Dennen over there currying a horse," I remarked.

"Gee," exclaimed Barbara, "they must be strong; I wonder where they are currying it."

On our way out we saw William Ross, Erwin Towle, James Hayes, Edward Hines and John Keating all lying asleep in the shade. They were part of the Communistic party waiting for the crowd to come from the track so that they could begin their soap-boxing. John Krol was their president, and his aides were Tony Maniace, Ernest Johnson, Dorothy Merrill, Herbert Price, Gladys Robinson, and George Ross. They were in Providence at this time attending a meeting of the Rhode Island Reds.

The next place we visited was the public high school. Who should be principal but that very tall impressive looking man, Leo Shaughnessy. Leo showed us through the school. Teaching biology we saw Julius Trocki and Carolyn Weston, the latter looking very flustered with her hand caught in a frog's mouth. Up in the chemistry lab were Romeo Paradis and George McDonald. George was sitting on the floor with his clothes in tatters. He had just shown the class an experiment on gasolene. Next we came to an English class being taught by comely Jane Mayall. Leo looked guilty when we caught him casting sheep's eyes in Jane's direction, so he turned us down into the gym. On the girls' side were Alice Van Wart and Kitty McInnis. Kitty had two dummy horses under her arms which she carried like nothing at all. On the boys' side were those two men of muscle, Rowland LeCain and Malcolm Garfink giving a demonstration of physical strength while the superintendent of schools (like father, like son), William Slayton, Jr. and the school board consisting of Evelyn Meunier, Victorine Belton, Madelyn Muise, Alice Lamburn, Beatrice LeBlanc, Gilda Paladino, Louise Pepper, and Pauline Kern all stood gawking at the show of strength.

"Well," said Leo, looking at his watch, "it's lunch time. Come along with me to lunch." We went with Leo to Doherty's Diner. On the way down we saw Bob Linder looking very prosperous, but Leo told us that no one knew how long he had been out of work because he had lost his birth certificate. By this time we were at Doherty's Diner where we ate a delicious meal served by Jane Farrar. After the meal Leo went back to the school and we proceeded on our way. We walked down Moody Street and into Ferrilli's department store. Ferrili was having a sale on short pants. Dick Stevens, Russel Leishman, Norman Lindstrom, Robert Mitchell, John Ryan, Arnold Helm, and Norman Russell were all out of breath while taking in the short-pants sale. On a counter at one side was Howie Kelly trying to auction off some of his many sweaters and jackets. Bidding for a "W" sweater were Evelyn Luce, Phyllis Bevins, Marion Brady, Elizabeth Freeman, and Betty Kitchen—all of whom would just love to wear one of Howard's sweaters.

On the book counter was a volume entitled "Advice to Lonely Hearts" by Janet Deacon. This had been written by Janet after years of research with Wes Turnbull, Bill MacDonald, and Bob Gordon. Struggling to get one of these books were Salvatore Biondo, Clifford Morris, Edwin Kezer, Paul Ramsey, Feore Porretti, and John Medina. The last two were probably buying the book just to see how it compared with their views.

As we came out of the store, a long white roadster with blue eyes painted all over it drew up to us and out jumped Bob Rutter. Bob told us that he was the head of the Waltham Dental School. He had made plenty of money with his automatic false teeth that bite off naughty words before they come out. Bob invited us to ride with him over his private highway between Waltham and Newton which he had built for some reason or other. We got into his car but only for a lift to Bob's Dental School. On the lawn of the school were George Shea, Stephen Santamaria, Philip Vinci, Charles Smelledge, and Walter Renkas, who were lying down on a lie-down strike. Bob had decided to comply with their demands, but it was so comfortable lying down that they thought they would stay there until the colder weather came on. Looking in the different offices we saw that Dorothy Ohnemus was Bob's personal secretary, Barbara Vinal and Dorothy Ohlsen were his vice-president and treasurer, respectively. Among his customers was Patsy (Fat) Caia, Mayor of Waltham, who only used false choppers for steak. Rita Murphy, Chief of Police, and Joe Pendergast, Fire Chief, were others of his well known customers. When we got back into Bob's car, he turned the radio to station W-A-C-K-Y in Waltham. Our announcer was Paul McIvor, who had a voice like a cracked record. He was presenting the Louis Laforet Light Landing Angel Wing hour. The wings were designed for second-story workers. Featured on the program were William Rice and his Blue Blowing Gallop Band, a new kind of music. Singing on the program was the Unholy Three Trio consisting of Evelyn Bazley, Nancy Andrews, and Eleanor Kilcup. They sang two ballads by Weeks and Wetherbee, "Mother Bring the Hammer there's a Fly on Baby's Head" and "We Feed the Baby Garlic so we can find Him in the Dark". Next Professor DeMeo delivered a lecture on "What Kind of a Noise Annoys an Oyster"? Directly after this came a program sponsored by Bently and Slaunwhite, custom corset makers. They always had been good at figures. The play Macbeth was featured on the program. The cast was:

Macbeth ..... George Abrahamson
Lady Macbeth ..... Edith Mandigo
Banquo ..... William Wiley
Duncan ..... Leonard Barnes
1st Witch ..... Janice Towne
2nd Witch ..... Margaret Towne
3rd Witch ..... Esther Trachtenberg
3 murderers Babe (Tarzan) Santamaria
(he was bad enough for all three).

We should have liked to hear the people speak, but Macbeth was too much for us, so we turned off the radio by mutual consent. We got out of Bob's car at the Common and bade him good-bye. Walking across the Common we met Oliver Coffin and his wife, the former Audrey Coburn. Oliver made his living with the pen. He wasn't an author. He was a warden. Coming along behind us arguing were Herbert Nims and his wife, Sophie Petrowsky, with their twelve children. We asked Sophie how her married life was. "Oh, Herbie's a model husband," she said, "but he's not a working model," and she led him away by the ear.

As we crossed Main Street, we saw a mob of people trying to get into the courthouse. Seeing an officer, Al Major, at the side door, we went over to him to learn how we could get in. "Shure", he said, "I can let youse in this way. Follow me." In we went, down through the recreation room where, engaged in a game of poker were members of the police force. When they looked around, we saw Charlotte Cody, Dorothy Cox, Mildred Harrison, Norma Olson, Mary Roughsedge, and Gertrude Stroum. Policing was a part-time job with the housewives of Waltham, Al told us. It gives them practice at browbeating, so they are perfect at home. We passed the cells, but they were empty as the prisoners could go out on good days. After saying good-bye to Al, we found a seat down front. Al Guzzi, of Guzzi's "Guzzling Gurgley Gargle," sitting next to us told us that it was a trial of assault and battery. Carleton Eaton was the defendant and the plaintiff was Frank Joyce. Just then Dante Mangini, baliff, called the court to order and the judge came in. He was none other than Art Claypole. The first person on the stand was Eaton himself. His lawyer, Lawrence McCourt, the crookedest crook lawyer in the state, asked him to tell his story.

"It was like this," Eaton began. "I was sitting in my home practicing on my saxdrumolin, which I invented myself when I smashed up a car full of instruments. All of a sudden I turned around, and there stood Frank Joyce with murder in his eye and an axe in his hand. I quickly extricated myself from my instrument and asked him what he was here for. He told me that he had come to kill me by special request of all the neighbors. Then he showed me a piece of paper signed by Marjorie Nichols, Mary Perne, Majorie Taylor and husband, Charles Scott, Shirley Cass, head of the Old Ladies' Home, where Adeline Ciarletta, Ruth Clarke, Gladys Atwood, Olga Carissimi, and Barbara Bianconi had all added their signatures. The paper stated that I, Carleton Eaton, was to be gotten rid of. Well, Joyce started to swing the axe, and I hit him on the head with a cigarette holder. He fell and didn't get up. At this time something caused the jurors to wake up, and we saw Foreman Emery Brown, and Howard Eden, Lucille Healey, Joseph Juliano, Christo Harakakas, Mary Kolodzieski, Ethel Moran, Helen Paul, Helen O'Donnell, Arthur Olson, Harold Alvarez and Adele Clark. They had all dozed off while playing Monopoly. Adele was busy making eyes at Judge Claypole.

The next witness was Eaton's wife, the former Jean Davis. "Where were you at the time of the assault?" asked District Attorney Walter Duddy. "I," said Jean, "was at a bridge party trying to win a gun."

"How come a gun was the prize?" asked Duddy.

"Well, you see," explained Jean, "our bridge club consists of Mary Coughlin, Elizabeth Brown, Alice Havey, Betty Hillson, Winifred Maney, Elsie Powers, and Evelyn Ricky. We were all just about set for the booby hatch if we heard that horn of my husband's anymore, so we put up the gun as a prize. The winner was to eradicate Carly. I won, but when I got home, my husband was gone and there were officers in my house."

"That's all," said Duddy. Next he called coroner Thomas McManus to the stand and asked him to tell what he found.

McManus explained, "I got to the house with Sgt. Henry Gibson. Here we found Captain Charles Bamfort and Lieutenant Donald Casavant keeping the crowds back. When we went into the living room, Frank Joyce was there floating around in his own blood. He had been dealt a bad blow with some heavy blunt instrument. We cleaned up the mess and went out to get some beer and sandwiches. Then we went over to a party at—"

"That's enough," interrupted Duddy; "we don't want your private life."

The next one on the stand was Franklyn Drew.

"What do you do?" asked Duddy.

"I write," said Drew. "My friends tell me I should have won the pullet prize."

"Don't you mean Pulitzer Prize?" said Duddy. "A pullet is fowl."

"Oh! so that's what they meant," answered Drew. "But anyway, what do you want?"

"You," said Duddy, "live next door to the defendant. Did you hear anything unusual about 10 o'clock?"

"No," Drew replied, "I didn't because I am in the habit of wearing ear plugs from eight until eleven.

"Well, then, what are you here for?" shouted Duddy.

"I was just getting up from my seat to go home," said Drew, "when someone shoved me up here."

Just then the foreman of the jury got up and announced that Eaton would be acquitted as it was a case of self-defense, but he must be sentenced to sit by the radio each night and listen to Donald Fernald's Rotten Rhythm Band. In this band were Charlie Erickson, Charles Bell, Albert Hansen, Robert Morrison, William Ryan, and Frank Ring. They were the Horrible Harmonians on Harold Reilley's Original Amateur Hour.

At this time we left. On the way out we bumped into Mae Viscogliosi, leading a very indignant crowd of people. We found that she was chairman of the S-T-O-O-G-E-S, which was the Society To Order Old Ghandi Evacuated. Old Mahatma was in Waltham staging a hunger strike, and many of his Waltham followers were going hungry with him. Mae and her committee, who were Doris Caswell, Catherine Arrigo, Chester Balben, Clara Bari, Willard Coffin, and Ruth Sanger, all owned 11 stores and they were complaining of the slump in business. Mahatma's followers were Biaggio Barrile, Veto Soprano, Joseph Charest, Frances Doucette, and Douglas Chase. Mae was arguing with Judge Isakson who took care of the Civil cases. When the judge gave Officer O'Toole the high sign, they were all put out. The judge told us he became a judge after his wife, Helena Petrovich, had left him to marry Prince Ernest Trudeau, who abdicated his throne to Charles Sawyer and Lorraine Milley. As soon as he had successfully abdicated, he found that Helena had eloped with watchmaker Bob Mullen—just to keep up with the times.

The next person we saw was Edward Desmond, reporter on the Tribune. He informed us that we should come in the next day as there was a case against Jeannette Berkovitz, Mary Bignis, and Margaret Burke, owners of the Three Busy Bees Gymasium where you could sweat off some surplus so as to be sweet sixteen once more. They were being used by Betty Burr, Eilene Bushey, Phyllis Cacciatore, Ida Ciarlette, Francis Sozanski, Marjorie Dennis, and Dorothy Eagan. They had been left locked in a steam room all night. Each one had lost about thirty pounds. Now their husbands wouldn't let them in because they were so thin that string beans looked like egg plants in comparison. Eddie's photographer and partner, Eddie Herbert, showed us some pictures he had taken. The first was the capture of two-faced Frank Bonomo in the movies—he liked double features. He was captured by those G men, Lawrence Boudreau, Felix Cincotta, and Melvin Whilerome Burns, the ace-in-the-hole G-man. They had all crowded into the picture completely obscuring two-faced Frank who made his escape at this time, aided by his gang of cut-throats, among whom were Dirty Face George Claffey, Pansy Puss William Clark, Muscle Head Walter Cotton, and Stringy Muscles Robert Carlman. Another picture was of the great flagpole-sitter, Kelsey Dunbrack, with his stand-in, John Ferro. Both boys did this just to keep away from their wives, Merle Everett and Mary Falzone, respectively.

The last picture he had was of Barbara Felt, Helen Fiske, and Mabel Foster. They were about to take off on a hop into the stratosphere to find out how far is "up." Two stowaways were visible in the picture. Looking closer, I discovered that they were Betty Gardner and Anne Gilligan.

After leaving the courtroom, we went down to the Miracle Picture Studios to observe the making of pictures. In set No. 1 Director Edward Glidden was making "Three Men and a Mouse" starring Alfred Graceffa, Stewart Grinnell, Karl Herendeen, and Eleanor Gavoni, who, I guess, was the mouse. Set No. 2 under the directors Ruth Greene and Elizabeth Hammond was busy on "Early to Bed, Early to Rise, But the Other Girls Go Out With the Guys," written by that chicken-farm author, Alice Hatch. Playing in this were Catherine Heaslip, Esther Helgeson, and Linnea Helgeson, the three farmerettes. Paul Leonard and Walter McCann were the city slickers; Anita Kaitz and Anne Karlbert were the guardian angels.

On set No. 3 Director Joseph Silva was directing that dynamic flicker by Mary Kyte entitled "Nothing," or "What Happens to the Girl Who Wears Cotton Stockings." That great female vamp, Maude Payne, was matching her wits against Marie Perott to win Richard McNamara, the two-gun Texas Ranger, who was busy saving the carload of school teachers. Among these, we recognized Rose Mase, Ethel Mickalson, Shirley Millar, and Leonard Melanson, who was only a cop in the carload.

We left the studios by the back gates and saw the three watchwomen, Dina Mariana, Eileen Moulton, and Dorothy Myshrall, getting ready for work with their rolling pins dangling from their waists. As we went outside the gates, we saw Irene Newman, Rita O'Brien, Ann Pendergast, Katherine Rando, and Eleanor Rasmussen, all crowding around Donald Ellison who was selling sweepstake, band nite, and lottery tickets to unsuspecting housewives.

As we moved along, we saw Dorothy Robert, Constance Russo, Jennie Salamone, and Donald Sanderson, standing by the edge of a golf course. Constance had just hit Phil Rolin, who was now sitting up, holding his head in his hands, on the head with a golf ball. Phil spoke up and said, "I want five dollars to see a doctor." "Didn't you hear me say 'Fore!'?" said Connie. "I'll take it." yelled Phil jumping up with his palm extended. "Ah, no you don't." This came from a special officer, Everett Dunbrack. He explained that Phil had already worked his little game on wando Paladino, Catherine Walsh, and Adelaide Rose Sardi, Marion Shedd, Virginia Short, and Helen Strazdaz, and he should be taken off to the cooler.

There was a pond on the golf course from which we heard many yells. Hurrying over, we found Frances Taylor, Doris Tenanty, Sally Thompson, Helen Tomlinson, Josephine Tortoretta, Mildred Tyner, Bertha Vasquezi, and Rita Walsh all struggling around in the water. Armando Paladino, Catherine Walsh, and Adelaide Webster pulled them out while Florence Wheaton told us that Janette Yunghams had urged them to play "eight girls in a boat," but they should have stuck to six.

Darkness was coming on and the stars were out. They were all twinkling; in fact, I never saw them shine so brightly. "Ouch, leggo my shoulder. Cut shaking me." "Come on. What's the matter with you?" said a voice. As I looked up, I saw an usher standing over me.

"What's the trouble? Did you fall and knock yourself out?" he asked.

"I guess so," I meekly answered and got up, brushed my clothes off, and walked out of the theater to finish June 10th, 1937.

"No excellent soul is exempt from a mixture of madness"
—Aristotle.

In the spirit of this gem from the tongue of the greatest of the glorious, great, Greek physicists and metaphysicians we of the graduating technical preparatory division have founded the Delpha Phi Epsilon Alpha with the particular purpose of permeating the cerebrum, cerebellum, and medulla oblongata of subordinate, yet sagacious, scholarly sophomores with the fanciful, fantastic, and whimsical caprice of matriculating to the ultimate zenith of their desires, the senior technical preparatory division.

To subsequently suceeding juniors: We intrust you with the magnum opus of perpetuating the high standards and long founded traditions, which we for the first time are committing to a following class.
